2016 NY Wound Care Symposium to Explore Interdisciplinary Approach

The 2016 NY Wound Care Symposium is the first that combines NYCPM's Wound Care Symposium with Mt. Sinai Heart, which is presenting the 19th annual CCVVC (the Complex Coronary, Valvular and Vascular Cases) meeting. With presentations by faculties from both NYCPM and Mt. Sinai, the June 14 conference will explore diabetes, bone infections, wounds, ulcers, treatments, limb salvage and amputations. According to Anthony R. Iorio, DPM, MPH, Co-Director of the Conference, he hopes that "everyone will understand the challenges that diabetics face and treatments using the most advanced vascular techniques with emerging wound technologies." One of the chief goals of the conference is to help attendees learn how to employ an interdisciplinary approach to wound prevention, treatment and limb salvage, and to understand the latest best-practice strategies to prevent and manage pressure ulcers as well as the comprehensive management of patients with venous and diabetic wounds. The wide-ranging panel discussions take both a macro- and a micro-view of the many issues and therapies involved in wound care issues.
