

NYCPM Faculty Speakers Cover Broad Range at NY17

Nick Argerakis, DPM, ('09) (left) and Joseph D'Amico, DPM (right) spoke at the New York Podiatric Clinical Conference in January.

On Sunday, January 29, eight College faculty spoke to participants at NY17, the New York Podiatric Clinical Conference, as part of the NYCPM Track. In the morning, Nick Argerakis, DPM ('09) kicked things off with a discussion of "Austin vs. Scarf: Which is Better?" followed by Joseph D'Amico, DPM, who talked about how he solved Jerry Seinfeld's plantar fasciitis. After lunch, attendees heard Michael Trepal, DPM ('81) discuss the "Distinctiveness of Pedal Melanoma," followed by Thomas Vitale, DPM ('85), and his talk about "Bi-lobed Skin Flaps for Wound Closure."

Howard Hillstrom, PhD, of the Hospital for Special Surgery, next spoke about the analysis of West Point Cadets, in which NYCPM students have played a big role; Russell Volpe, DPM ('83) spoke about "A Paradigm for Decision Making in Pediatric Pes Valgus," Samuel Adegboyega, DPM ('06) spoke about the "Use of Selective Plantar Fascia Release for DFU," and Anthony Iorio, DPM ('81), MPH talked about "Best Practices in Chronic Wound Care." NYCPM's Track concluded with Prakash Krishnan, MD's discussion of "State of the Art in Restoring Blood Flow in Infra-Popliteal Disease."