

Judith Quintana, M.P.A. Assistant Dean, Clinical Clerkships and Affiliations

In her current role at NYCPM, Judith has administrative oversight of the clinical curriculum and affiliations. Her passion is helping medical students succeed at every step of their medical school education.

For the past 18 years she was immersed in undergraduate medical education at some of the New York region's premiere medical schools and hospitals. She was engaged in curriculum management and development, disability services and all aspects of medical school administration and operations. For 22 years prior to that work, she was charged with senior-level administrative responsibilities for hospital-based specialty services and assisted hospital systems manage diversity and inclusion.

Judith earned a Bachelor of Science degree from Fordham University and an Executive Master of Public Administration degree from Baruch College School of Public Administration.