NYCPM had a great weekend at NY20, the New York Podiatric Clinical Conference in late January. Thanks to the New York State Podiatric Medical Association (NYSPMA), a Pre-Med Advisor Event held on Friday January 24 was attended by over 10 advisors for top colleges across the Northeast, including Johns Hopkins U., George Washington U., and Howard University. Advisors heard from some of the top DPMs in the field about how they can share the exciting opportunities that are available within the podiatric medical profession with their students.

On Saturday, NYCPM hosted an Open House at the conference that was attended by over 70 prospective students -- our largest open-house attendance in recent years. These students were able to hear Jennifer D'Amico, DPM's (2007) presentation “Introduction to Podiatric Medicine;” attend a “NYCPM Alumni Showcase” with Drs. Nadia Din and Nicole Kaiser (both Class of 2006); a presentation by Ashley Adcock, NYCPM’s Director of Enrollment Management, about the NYCPM advantage; they toured the conference’s exhibit hall as well. Students were also able to attend a hands-on suturing workshop, led by the talented team of Emilio Goez, DPM, Residency Director for Saint Barnabas hospital, and his residents.

Thanks to all who volunteered time and resources to make these events successful!
