

Two Students Go Far For Community Service

Mark Kosinski, DPM ('83), Professor in the Department of Medicine, recently wrote to recognize two first-year students for their service:

"I am writing this e-mail to recognize two of our students from the Class of 2022, who volunteered for a health fair on a Saturday in September: Olivia Moorlach and Raphael Raman. Despite the fact that they live in Manhattan (within walking distance of the College), they nonetheless found a way to take public transportation (the E train to the Kennedy Airport stop) and then walk 30 minutes to their destination on the outer reaches of Queens, after which they spent the next 5 hours in service to the College.

It should also be noted that the sign-up sheet was posted the day before the event and they wasted no time in volunteering.

While there, they gained experience in performing lower extremity physical examinations and history taking. All this while being students at NYCPM for only a few weeks. It was my pleasure to work with these fine students and wanted to make their professionalism known to the administration."

Dean Trepal recommended that notes of commendation be added to these students' files.
